lations with German Officials.

Scripps-McRea League Rennes, September 1-A number of witnesses testified for and against the accused at the Dreyfus court martial

M. DeBruille was recalled and reiterated bis testimony that Dreyfus had treasonable relations with a German officer at the house of a woman named Bodson.

Mrs. F. E. Brooke.

The young ladies of the Cooking club met yesterday, and all the "goodies" baked and roasted were sampled and talked about until the electric lights saisted officially or otherwise with the German officers, nor had be met them.

This was in reply to evidence by a hostier. The testimony then reverted to the possibility of Dreyfus having written the bordereau. This evidence South Africa immediately.

was conflicting.

Labori, in a private coversation, does not speak hopefully in regard to the Dreyfus verdict. The fact that the judges ask questions about points which were settled long ago, if evidence could bettle them, is a discouraging sign: Labori's wound is easying aging sign: Labori's wound is causing him much suffering.

FRENCH LAW

And Rules of Evidence in the Famous Dreyfus Case.

Seripps-McRacLeague.

New York, September 1 .- Bafel R. lovin, law partner of James B. Eustie, x-ambassador to France, and a specinner in the laws of France, said yes-terday in regard to the French pro-

"In the first place, there are no French rules of evidence, Almost anything is put in as evidence, hearsay.
inuendo, rambling tales, quotations from letters, and anything that in the judgment of the witness bears on the case in question. It is assumed that the judge will not consider irrelevant matters. In making up his opinion he is guided only by his conscience, hence there can be no appeal from his judgment on the question of evidence. An appeal can be based only on the question of procedure or interpretation of law. A witness can refuse to reply to a question. The judge may direct him to reply, but if he refuses there is no contempt of court. So the court of cassation could not be appealed to by breyfus' counsel because of the intro-fuction of worthless evidence.

The court of cassation has no relation to the court martial. It can, however, receive a petition from the ac-cused's counsel, if subsequently to its judgment new evidence has been found, or if a rule of procedure has been violated, as was the case in the first court martial. So far during the present courtmartial there has been no such violation. If Dreyfus is found guilty the decision will be final. In this country comes finally before the the president or secretary of war, but in France it is referred to a war minister and then archived, just as if it were referred to a clerk

Mr. Govin was asked if the fact that the scourt martial had enlarged the cope of investigation would have any bearing upon the sustaining of a pos-sible appeal. He replied that the court martial had that right; that unevidence the judge is practically a law into himself.

unto himself.

"Revision of judgments in France," he continued, "depend simply upon two things first, procedure, and, secondly, interpretation of the law. If an established rule of procedure has been violated, an appeal may be taken to a higher court, or if it is held that the law has been misinterpreted, an appeal is not taken upon that ground. appeal is not taken upon that ground An appeal is not taken, however, upon the guilt or innocence of the accused, but simply upon the interpretation of the law applying to the cose.

An effort," he said, "is being made to prove that Dreyfus alone had an opportunity to get the information alleged to have been given to foreign powers. This puts him in a different In French law the burden Inited States forces be a sintained in its considered guilty until he proves in the difficult position of trying to prove that he difficult position of trying to prove that he did not do a thing that he d dn't do.
